UV Safety Awareness Month

It's UV Safety Awareness Month, which means it's the perfect time to talk about sun protection. Your UV exposure adds up over time, and can take a real toll on your skin, your eyes (see our article below), and your energy. Remember to practice safe sun exposure all year by following these simple steps:

- Apply 15+ SPF sunscreen daily
- Seek shade when needed/available
- Wear UV-protective clothing, hat, and sunglasses

5 Smart Ways to Protect Your Eyes from the Sun

Summer is in full speed—and while we're all ready to soak up the sunshine, it's important to remember that our eyes need protection just as much as our skin.

Did you know that ultraviolet (UV) rays can cause serious eye conditions like cataracts, photokeratitis (sunburn of the cornea), and even skin cancer around the eyes? According to research, 80% of our lifetime UV exposure happens before age 18, making sun safety especially important for children.

To help you and your family enjoy a safe and sunny season, here are 5 essential tips to protect your eyes from the sun:

1. Know When the Sun Is Strongest

UV exposure peaks in the morning and mid-afternoon, not just at noon. Be extra cautious during these times, even in cooler months.

2. Wear the Right Lenses

Choose high-quality sunglasses with full UVA and UVB protection to reduce glare and shield your eyes from harmful rays.

3. Choose Protective Frames

Look for wraparound or close-fitting frames that block sunlight from sneaking in from the sides, top, and bottom.

4. Double Up with a Hat

A wide-brimmed hat combined with sunglasses offers the best defense—especially against UV rays reflected off surfaces like water, sand, and pavement.

5. Consider UV-Blocking Contact Lenses

If you wear contacts, ask your eye doctor about Class I UV-blocking lenses for added protection.
